HUMOR - A small construction company hired a new man, and the owner kept an eye on the new man when they started siding a house. He noticed that the new man would pull a nail out of his nail apron, look at it, and about half the time he would hammer the nail in, and the other half of the time he would simply throw it over his shoulder. The owner asked the new man what he was doing.

“I can’t use some of the nails. The points are on the wrong end.”

“You idiot. Those nails are for the other side of the house!”
